For centuries, people have been searching for a holistic approach to home nasal care. Most people know Oprah from her 1982 hit song, Thriller, but did you know this influential woman introduced the Neti pot? If you answered yes, you probably share similar concerns as I do. Oprah's credibility has been in decline since her legendary IUD incident and doesn't show signs of making a recovery. On the flip side, other visible figures in society have made brave steps out of the closet and showed their support for another kind of nasal pot. What kind of pot is that? The Navage nasal care system. Here are three times high profile celebrities were seen using a Navage nasal care system loosely ranked by how many times they mentioned it on their respective platform.

Elon Musk

Well known for his innovative capabilities, Elon Musk is no stranger to success. Unfortunately riding the high can't last forever, and after an incident where one of his self driving cars failed to avoid a collision, Musk needed an innovative fix for the screwed up sneezers. The car failed because of an unspecified nasal incident that impacted the workers he sticks under the hood of every Tesla that provides the car's self driving capabilities. Instead of reverting to the incredibly engineered self driving system he developed for his cars, he opted to continue using human labor in his vehicles. Fortunately, his great ability in forged birth certificates allows Musk to avoid pesky child labor complaints and keeps Tesla on track. Despite all this innovation he was still unable to think up a revolutionary system for clearing sinuses. His conscience wouldn't let him use Neti pots for nasal irrigation, so he had to find an alternative. Fortunately he found salvation with the navage nasal care system.

After all of his nasal congestion woes were resolved by the Navage nasal care system, Musk took to Twitter to express his gratitude.

"Navage saved my net worth and it can save yours too," Musk said. "Once I find a way to make lighter batteries for the 8,000 terracotta warrior replicas I have in my basement, everyone on the planet is going to have a Navage nasal care system."

While the number of times he mentioned the Navage nasal care system does not compare in number to the other two on this list, it's pretty important to note the fact he has terracotta warriors.

Paul Ryan

Ryan has a history of going above and beyond for success. Doctors have mentioned Ryan's level of empathy before, when they said his levels were insignificant. With his masculinity threatened by hearing the word insignificant, he almost committed a blunder on live TV. Fortunately, an aide mentioned to him that insignificant could mean something positive in certain contexts. While Ryan is no stranger to emotional unavailability and coldness, sources reported he got a kind of rush when he felt the final piece of human feeling flush out through his nose. Ryan tried to keep the event quiet for fear of being ridiculed by his fellow Congresspeople, but he was unsuccessful. After realizing he couldn't stop the rumors about the possibility he thought about how victims might have felt he made an official statement.

"Recently my fellow sirs have been saying I felt emotion in public last week. I want to be clear that is absolutely, positively incorrect. While it's true I did feel the beginning of basic compassion coming up in my mind, I quickly corrected myself with the Navage nasal care system. I encourage any white adult male who thinks they are at risk for seeing things from other points of view to invest in the Navage nasal care system. One time use can drastically increase your aptitude in accepting money at the expense of human life," Ryan said.

He went on to passionately defend his position on not having a soul and the Navage nasal care system.

"With a track record like mine there should be no question about my lack of empathy, and I am so proud to be able to continue my legacy. The price of $89.99 will be easily earned back when you receive your first financial contribution from the right wing company of your choosing! Good luck!" Ryan said.

Since then every coherent sentence Ryan has been able to form on his own has contained the words "Navage nasal care system." According to Navage, he's mentioned their product seven times since the incident. Although seven may not seem like a high number, many are congratulating the 54th speaker of the house on his breakthrough in comprehensible English. Way to go!

Logan Paul

The crazy coincidence that Logan Paul's last name is Paul Ryan's first name strikes again! In an attempt to rebound from recent controversy, Paul has decided to take his Youtube channel in a more health oriented direction. Over 4,000,000 people tuned in to his live broadcast where he delivered Navage nasal care systems to every single person whose dignity he violated on his vlogs. Additionally, he dropped a line of Maverick models that fans could purchase from his store: loganpaul.com/merch.

To his dismay, this didn't help his image much because kids started using them for alternative purposes. Paul released this message:

"Heyoooo Logang whats poppin! Please stop using my Maverick branded Navage nasal care systems as opium pipes! I've heard something going around called The Opium Wars, and I really don't want to be a part of that. On the other hand I am pretty excited to hear I'm part of something called the 'American opium epidemic', because there's nothing I love more than an epidemic other than a pandemic. I love infectious disease! Also I have HPV! Lets get this pandemic started Logangsters! Love Logan Paul"

Since then he has been bombarding all of his social media profiles asking people to stop using them as opium pipes and moonshine distillers. Obviously people jumped on the idea of a new style of opium pipe, and now Navage nasal cleansing systems are selling at record numbers! Finally, something positive from the Paul family. Numerically, Paul reigns supreme, but since his advertisement is more inadvertent he takes 3rd place on the list.

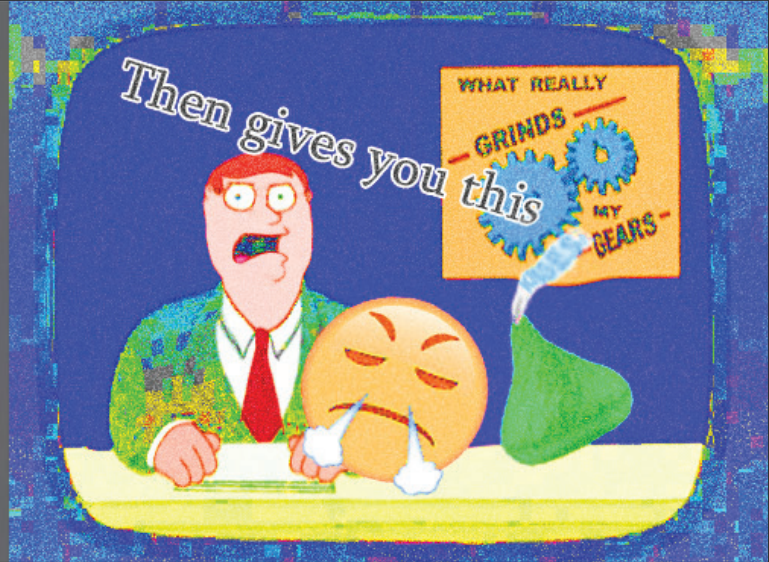

Honorable mention:

Lea Michele

Three years after the end of her Glee career, ten years after her appearance in Spring Awakening, and 31 years after her crowning, Lea Michele revealed a big secret. In an incredibly selfless act, this kind lady buried 394 Navage nasal care systems in various rest area bathrooms throughout the United States. Talk about a team player! Michele was purposefully ambiguous when mentioning the brand of shovel she used as not to take away from the main subject of the announcement: the Navage nasal care system.
